

This figure displays a large-scale heatmap visualization of gene expression data. The data is organized into a grid of colored squares, where the color intensity represents the expression level of a specific gene across different samples. The grid is divided into several distinct rectangular regions, suggesting different clusters of genes or samples. The color intensity varies across the grid, indicating different levels of expression. The overall layout is dense and detailed, typical of a large-scale genomic data visualization.